ASSESSMENT

For the last two months I have written newsletter articles about the GTU’s recent reaccreditation by the WASC Senior College and University Commission. Following up on one of the recommendations we got from WSCUC, it seems appropriate this month to focus on the assessment of our academic programs.

What then is assessment? In current academic terminology, assessment is “the process of gathering and discussing information from multiple and diverse sources in order to develop a deep understanding of what students know, understand, and can do with their knowledge as a result of their educational experiences; the process culminates when assessment results are used to improve subsequent learning.” (Mary E. Huba and Jann E. Freed, Learner-Centered Assessment on College Campuses: Shifting the Focus from Teaching to Learning, 2000)

In higher education, the assessment movement can be dated to the mid-1980s when educational reformers began to advocate for defining learning outcomes as an effective pedagogical strategy. Around the same time, government agencies and legislatures were calling for greater accountability on the part of institutions of higher learning, which receive enormous amounts of public funding as well as student tuition. In the past thirty years, both educational theorists and government watchdogs have only increased their commitment to measurable outcomes, direct and indirect evidence of student learning, periodic evaluation of results, and efforts to “close the loop” so that schools are continually improving and adjusting to changes in society and the particular constituencies they serve.

Although I have not always been a fan of assessment jargon, I do see the value in continuous rigorous evaluation of our academic programs. It just makes sense to me that students are more likely to learn if teachers tell them what they are expected to know and to do after they finish a course or graduate with a degree. And teachers are more likely to improve their teaching if they pay attention not only to what students say on a course evaluation form but also to the cumulative evidence of student performance measured against pre-established goals and compared with students in other courses or in other schools.

Assessment is just an organized and systematic way of asking a series of questions: “What are students supposed to learn?” “How well are they learning it?” “What can we do to help them learn better?” “Did what we tried to do to help them make a positive difference?”

At that GTU we have been doing assessment all along, in formal and informal ways. Like every educational institution in this country from kindergartens to graduate schools, we are under constant pressure to do a better job of tracking student progress and documenting it for accreditation agencies, the federal government that provides students with financial aid, and the various publics whom we serve. Assessment is challenging work, but it is necessary—and potentially transformative.

PLTS LUTHER LECTURE: CLIMATE, JUSTICE, HOPE, AND A LUTHERAN ETHIC OF LOVE INCARNATE

Wednesday, April 6th at 9:00am.
PLTS Chapel of the Cross
Humankind stands at a turning point in history. Either we continue on a fast track toward climate disaster or we harness human genius and creativity to forge a sustainable relationship between the human species and our planetary home. The moral challenge is heightened by matters of climate justice: those most vulnerable to the ravages of climate change are also the people least responsible for it. In this context, Earth’s religious traditions are called to plumb their depths, seeking wellsprings of moral vision, hope, and wisdom for building ecologically sound and socially just ways of living. Lutheran traditions are rich with such resources. One is the call to faith active in love that seeks justice. Another is the call to heed God’s presence “flowing and pouring through all things.” This lecture explores both as transformative Spirit-led invitations and gifts.

Professor Cynthia Moe-Lobeda is this year’s Luther Lecturer. This event is co-sponsored by the Karen Lebacqz Endowment Fund at the GTU.

“Ancient Iconography in a New Context: Byzantine Monosandali and Their Monastic Audiences”
Rossitza Schroeder, Associate Professor of Arts and Religion, Pacific School of Religion

Location: The Legion of Honor

Late thirteenth- to early fourteenth-century Byzantine churches contain images of military saints wearing only one shoe (monosandali). These figures are known from ancient mythology and primary sources, such as Thucydides’ History of the Peloponnesian War. The speaker will elaborate on the meaning of these half-shod military saints in medieval Greece. This particular iconography added a sense of instability and flux, creating a suitable environment for the contemplative practices of the monks meditating upon them.

Administrative Changes at IBS

For the past twenty-five years, the Institute of Buddhist Studies has been led by its Dean, Dr. Richard K. Payne. With Dr. Payne’s guidance, IBS has been able to overcome many challenges as it advanced its educational goals. This past year, Dr. Payne has decided to retire from the position of Dean. As he returns to a focus on teaching and research, IBS has chosen to take this as an opportunity to revise its organizational structure to best support its expanding educational programs.

On January 8, 2016, the IBS Board of Trustees approved an institutional reorganization and made a number of administrative appointments. Rev. Dr. David Matsumoto, the director of IBS’s Contemporary Shinshu Buddhist Studies program and a past resident minister of the Berkeley Buddhist Temple, will now serve in the newly created position of IBS Provost and Vice-President for Academic Affairs.

The new Dean of Students and Faculty Affairs is Dr. Scott Mitchell, a graduate of the GTU and current member of the Core Doctoral Faculty.

The faculty and staff of the Institute are looking forward to this new chapter in its history, and are excited to be working toward accreditation and deepening our relationship to the GTU.

Old Texts, New Understandings: The Revolution in Editions of Scripture

A new era dawns for the printing of the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin texts of the Bible, and of the Qur’an. New manuscript discoveries and new understandings of how scriptural texts were affected by the culture of manuscripts have set in motion major international text projects animated by new concepts in how texts should be presented in printed editions, and eventually in translations. This dramatic new era is exemplified by an emerging new edition of the Hebrew Bible, the latest new edition of the Greek New Testament, a new in-depth examination of the Old Latin Bible (a Text which is uncontrollably by any church authority and frequently inaccurate), and the recent discovery of one of the oldest known manuscripts of the Qur’anic text. What are these discoveries and understandings, what is new about them, and what do they mean for our understanding of the Bible? What do early (Qur’anic) manuscripts tell us about the use of the Qur’anic text at the beginning of Islam? About its stability and/or fluidity?

The participants:

9:10:30am Ron Hendel, Norma and Sam Dabby Professor of Hebrew Bible and Jewish Studies at the University of California, Berkeley, general editor of The Hebrew Bible: A Critical Edition

10:30-12:00 am Alba Fedeli, Research Fellow at the Center for Religious Studies at Central European University, Budapest, who rediscovered one of the oldest Qur’anic manuscripts.

Her lecture title: Editing Qur’anic manuscripts: the case of the Mingana-Lewis palimpsest and its digital edition: ‘Are we producing data or texts?’

Lunch Break

1:45-3:15pm David Trobisch, Museum of the Bible. Director of Collections. Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and Washington, DC and one of the five editors of the Novum Testamentum Graece at the Münster Institute for New Testament Textual Research

His lecture is on: The Text of the New Testament: Is there an original?

3:30-5:00pm Annette Weissenrieder, Associate Professor of New Testament, with Dr. Thomas Bauer from the University of Erfurt, co-editor of the Old Latin Bible of the Gospel of Luke and Matthew

Her lecture is on: The new edition of the Old Latin Synoptic Gospels: What do these texts tell us about early Christianity?
