As I get older, I find myself re-reading books and articles written by some former teachers who have departed this life and gone to their eternal reward. Four mentors in particular have been on my mind in recent months.

William Poteat taught undergraduate courses at Duke on philosophy of religion. He introduced me to the thought of Michael Polanyi, Hannah Arendt, and Maurice Merleau-Ponty. But he used to say that he didn’t really teach texts, but a point of view. In one seminar there was only one textbook (Arendt’s The Human Condition) and I don’t think we ever got past the first chapter. Poteat would read a sentence, or just a phrase, and then initiate a Socratic dialogue that lasted for three hours. He taught us how to see, and how to think about what we saw.

In the Duke Divinity School, I studied systematic theology with Robert Cushman. He had been the dean of the school, a prominent Methodist theologian, and a Protestant observer at Vatican II. After decades in the classroom, he had mastered the art of speaking at the precise speed that allowed students to transcribe every word of his lectures if we wrote constantly as fast as possible. A convinced Barthian, he nevertheless insisted that we had to come to terms with Schleiermacher and Bultmann in order to appreciate the need for a corrective. He probably wouldn’t have liked the term “contextual theology,” but that is what I learned from him.

At General Theological Seminary in New York in the mid-1970s, I had the good fortune to study early church history with Richard Norris, who later moved 90 blocks north to teach at Union Seminary. His lectures were so eloquent that for a moment at the end, you thought you really understood what Augustine was up to in The City of God or whatever the topic was that day. Near the end of his life he translated selections from various commentators on the Song of Songs, including some parts of Bede that I have translated as well. My version stays close to the Latin so you can follow it word by word. Dick’s translations are less literal, more lyrical; oftentimes they sing.

Back at Duke for a Ph.D. in the early 1980s, I read patristic Greek with Franklin Young. He made us parse every verb, identify every grammatical construction, and consider every nuance of each dictionary definition. It pained him to have to make generalizations about theological positions, which he always insisted were only tentative judgments subject to refinement in light of further research. His passion was for the particularities of language and conceptual thought.

When I go back now and read the published writings of these teachers from long ago, I can still hear their voices in my head. I learned so much from what they taught me, but even more from the ways they taught it. I expect you have memories of gifted mentors too. Take a moment to be grateful for what you received from their examples.
DISTINGUISHED FACULTY LECTURE: NOVEMBER 5, 2013, 7PM

Dr. William Short, OFM and Professor of Christian Spirituality at the Franciscan School of Theology (FST) will deliver the 2013 Distinguished Faculty Lecture on Tuesday, November 5, 2013, 7:00pm at the PSR Chapel.

Each year the faculty of the Member Schools nominate distinguished faculty from outside their school who they feel embody the scholarly standards, teaching excellence, and commitment to ecumenism that define the GTU. The nominations are considered by the Council of Deans who elects the Distinguished Faculty Lecturer. The Distinguished Faculty Lecture is entitled "From Paris to Alcalá: The Franciscan School and the University, 1219-1533." The response will be given by Dr. Christopher Ocker, Professor of Church History at San Francisco Theological Seminary (SFTS).

Immediately following the lecture, there will be a reception in the Doug Adams Gallery across the courtyard from the PSR Chapel.

“Changing Culture and 21st Century Theology”

You are cordially invited to attend the Fall Meeting of the Pacific Coast Theological Society (PCTS) on Friday, November 1 from 1:30-8:30 p.m. and Saturday, November 2 from 9 a.m.–noon in the Tucson Room at Church Divinity School of the Pacific.

The theme is “Changing Culture and 21st Century Theology” and begins Friday afternoon with Philip Clayton (Claremont School of Theology) challenging current conceptions of theology as featured in his book, Transforming Christian Theology. Jack Crossley (USC) will provide a response.

An oral report follows by President and Dean of CDSP, Mark Richardson who will speak on the topic: “Transforming Theology at the GTU in Light of the Church’s Changing Mission.” Saturday morning centers on the work of Mark Scandrette (founding director of Relmage) and concludes by noon. As is the custom of the Society, reading links are posted on the PCTS website (www.pcts.org) and texts should be read ahead of time.

Note that the Friday afternoon session is followed by cocktails and dinner. Please RSVP with Mark Graves (mark_graves@comcast.net) so that appropriate reservations can be made. Saturday morning, the group will convene at 9 a.m. for coffee and light refreshments. The open discussion session follows and finishes by noon. Fees are located on the website (www.pcts.org) and can be paid at the Meeting.

PCTS is a professional society dedicated to the exchange of views on topics germane to the theological endeavor. It has a long and distinguished history, and its founding predates the establishment of the GTU. Membership is open to scholars and students interested in the theological endeavor broadly defined. Dues are $45 per academic year for actively employed scholars and $22.50 for retirees and students. Go to www.pcts.org for further information.
Newhall Awards are competitive awards for GTU doctoral students engaged in collaborative teaching or research with GTU Core Doctoral Faculty mentors in the belief that such collaborative work would contribute to the professional development of the students and the mission of the GTU. Awards are given for fall, spring, or both semesters, but the application process takes place only in the fall (in order to give faculty and students time to submit courses for next year’s Course Schedule). The Newhall Award Application form is available on the GTU webpage. (Go to “Students” and scroll down to the “Professional Development” section to find the link.) The form contains all guidelines and criteria the Dean and Core Doctoral Faculty Awards Committee use to select award recipients. Complete applications are due in the GTU Dean’s Office by 5pm Friday, November 8; these must come from the student and the professor for a project involving both. Award amounts depend on the number of appointments made, but are generally at least $3000 per semester.
